It's a data center, not a hospital

The Inyokern Data Center is a data center; not a hospital or similar facility that lives will depend on. If the electric grid goes down the option of polluting local air should not be on the table. The facility should simply accept that while the power is out, their system is down. Bringing in diesel generators has real world effects on real people. Meanwhile, there are no adverse affects on lives when someone simply has to wait a few hours before they get their AI-generated picture of a purple 5-legged unicorn.
