Holding Ourselves to a Higher Standard

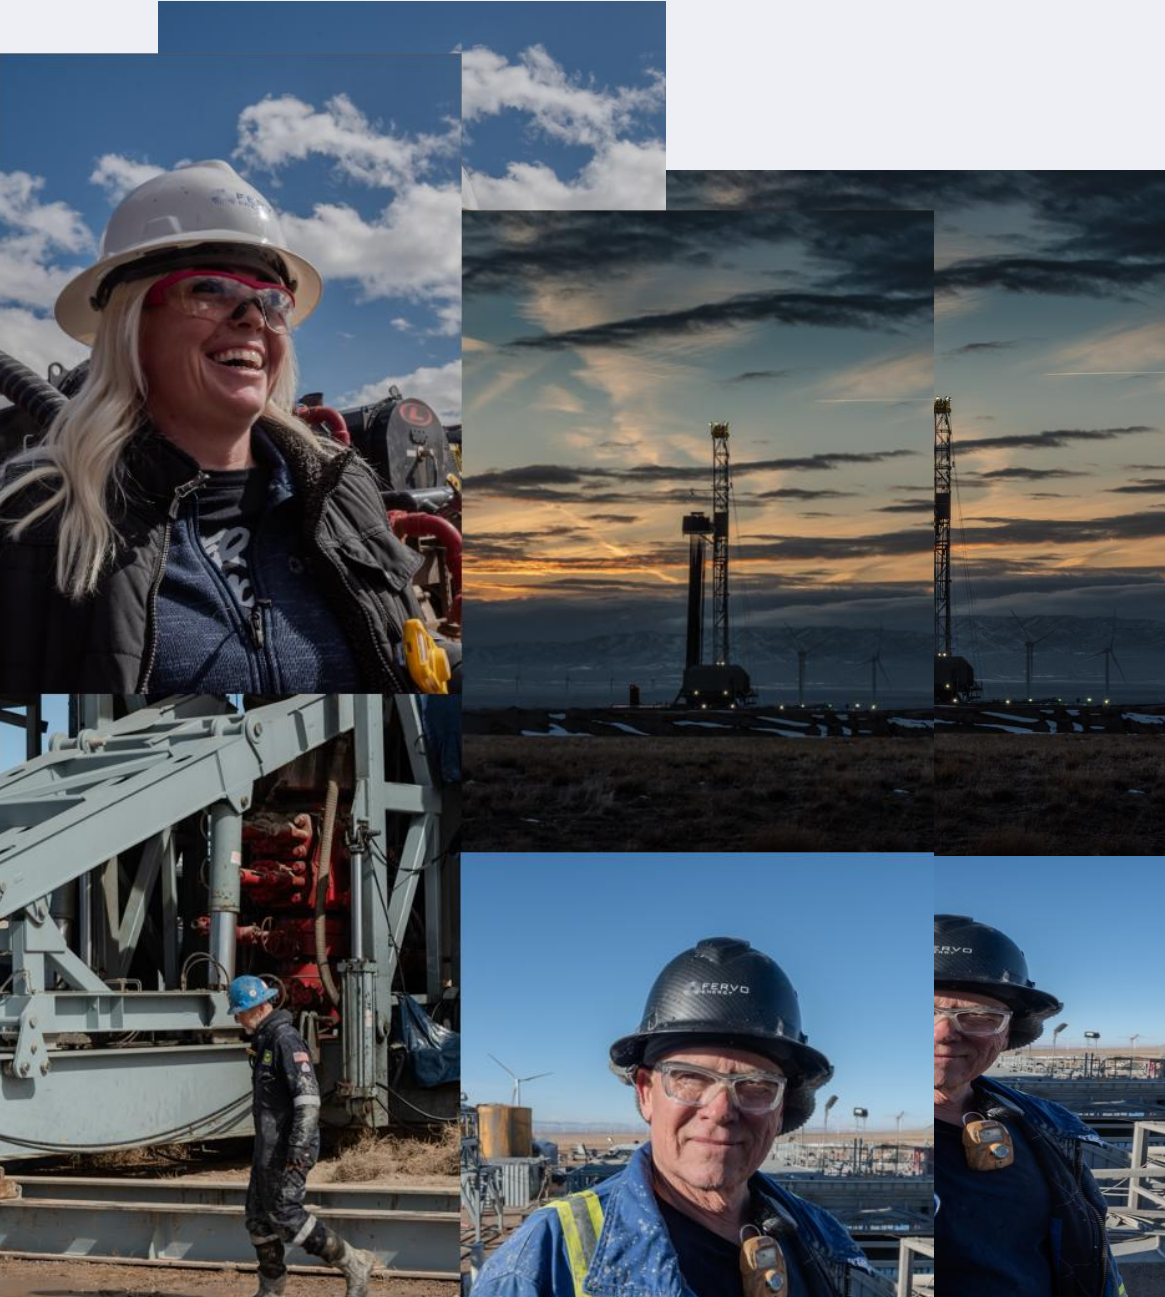

Principles for Responsible Geothermal Development

- 01 Seek consultation from early planning stages in affected communities and tribal groups, use best practices to ensure consultation and engagement reaches those communities, and seek to meet community value expectations;
- 02 Focus on fair labor practices and local hiring, respect existing labor relationships, and provide inclusive training programs for health and safety;
- 03 Minimize land disruption, avoid sensitive and conservation areas and naturally-occurring hydrothermal features, rigorously protect threatened and endangered species and cultural heritage sites, and maintain sufficient funds for closure and reclamation;
- 04 Avoid impacting surface and subsurface freshwater resources as well as natural aquifers by maintaining well integrity and zonal isolation through the lifecycle and closure of the facility, ensuring safe and transparent chemical use, and implementing spill prevention and containment measures;
- 05 Mitigate seismic risk through real-time monitoring, operational guardrails, and consultation with impacted communities; and
- 06 Leverage power generation technologies with zero operational emissions or air quality impacts and use best practices to reduce or eliminate fugitive dust and gaseous emissions during construction and operations.
