I attended the Oakland session on 10/10/13 and asked a question, but want to make sure the regulations can clarify something.

Many projects will have an energy component (replacing lights and a boiler) along with a non-energy component (installing an elevator, replacing flooring and painting). Please clarify the best method to segregate costs. One method would be to have the energy items identified as a sub-component of a bid and then use the percentage of soft costs (architect, project manager, Inspector, testing Lab, etc) to determine the overall part eligible for Prop 39 and the part not eligible for Prop 39 funds.
