One atmosphere

Hello from Australia and thank you for the opportunity to comment.

While there are many ways of generating electricity, there is only one atmosphere which we all share. The reliable supply from a nuclear plant, when forced to close, is invariably replaced by the only viable equivalent from fossil fuel combustion, which increases the real amount of greenhouse gasses in our air.

The intervention of motivated groups, intent on closing nuclear plants, is motivated by 40 year old ideology which cannot seem to catch up with modern circumstances. I am sure reasonable minds will recognise pretence in cases like this, and fully consider expert views on the seismic hazards in the context of the wider benefits to the immediate region, the state of California, the United States of America, and the wider world.
