To the California Energy Commission,

The Sierra Club submits the following 5,858 digital signatures on the behalf of our members and supporters, expressing support for the proposed Title 24 Building Energy Efficiency Standards. The following is their public comment:

Petition language:

I write to support the proposed Title 24 Building Energy Efficiency Standards. Thanks to the California Energy Commission, the state is a national leader in energy efficiency standards for new construction and renovation and will be the first state in the country to mandate zero net electricity through a building code.

The proposed standards will save energy and water, require solar power, reduce reliance on gas plants, improve air quality, and cut climate pollution. And at the same time, the new standards will lower utility bills and provide greater comfort to residents.

The proposed standards do not, however, include gas in the zero net energy requirement. I urge the Commission in the next update to the standards to reduce our reliance on gas and get the state on a pathway to climate-friendly zero emission buildings.

Here in California, we all know the true cost of gas. We were witness to the blowout at San Bruno and Aliso Canyon, and subsequent reliability and safety risks from the gas system. We also know that gas is a key contributor to climate change and dirty air.

California now burns as much gas in our buildings as we do in our power plants. And, gas is responsible for over 40 percent of building-sector-related GHG emissions. While we have programs to increase the use of renewable energy and reduce our reliance on gas plants, we do not have policies in place to replace gas use in buildings with available high-efficiency electric technologies that can be powered by clean energy.

In the next update, we urge the California Energy Commission to align the Building Energy Efficiency Standards with the state's climate goals by raising the bar for climate-friendly buildings.

Zero emission buildings are the next frontier for clean energy in California, and with your leadership, we can speed the transition to clean, safe, and renewable energy in our homes and buildings!

Sincerely,

The Undersigned Sierra Club members and supporters

I have had solar panels since April 2014. I have rarely had to use more power than my panels have produced. Nearly every month a good portion of my solar power production goes to the Los Angeles power grid. Not only do my solar panels reduce pollution

#DefeatTheOligarchy

What can we 99%ers do?

The Oligarchies are in power!

How do we win against the richest 0.1%ers?

We elect FAIRist politicians & adopt the 12 Principles of FAIRism in U.S. Congress.

Start with Principle #1 AMEND CITIZENS UNITED
