Attn: Chairman Mrs. Pfannenstiel CEC;

I'm a student at Chabot College, and a resident in San Leandro. I am hearing that the California Energy Commission has plans to approve two Hayward power plants.

There have been little or no hearings about the power plants. The main concerns are from power plants emissions affect nearby residents and possibly nearby cities, too. I do suffer from minor asthma as a child from car emission from my father's employment with cars. The power plants emissions are especially hard on children, senior citizens, and people with respiratory problem.

Can the Commission review it plans before approving these power plants? Can more hearings with local residents and nearby cities input comments and ideas? Has the Commission considered going Green-Clean technologies and alternative locations for example consider solar panel power plant? How about a possible partnership with Chabot College for research and future developments?

Sincerely,

Sherman Wong
