Dear Public Officials:

My family attended Explore Mission Trails Day this past weekend. Our kids, ages 2 and 4, had a blast riding ponies, exploring a fire truck and ambulance, rock climbing, getting their faces painted, touching a rosy boa, seeing a woodpecker, holding a caterpillar, getting their faces painted, making a variety of art projects, and being out in such a special park.

I learned at this event that there are tentative plans to build a power plant near the park and my neighborhood. I don't understand why this would be a good idea. The plant would increase air pollution and violate the protected space of the park. One of the reasons we chose to live in the Navajo neighborhood was because of the park and the quiet, natural refuge it provides.

It doesn't make sense to change zoning laws to build this plant. Also, our society is moving towards using green energy such as solar panels. Protect Mission Trails and our air; I urge you not to support the Quail Brush project!

Sincerely,

Andrea Grillot
