To whom it may concern:

As a property owner in direct proximity to the AES power plant I have a humble voice I wish to express in direct opposition.

The infrastructure is a dinosaur. The legacy of the use case dates back to when US citizens placed little value to their waterfronts as used them to harbor utility services, evacuate waste, and maintain bone-yards of broken and crumbling equipment.

Conscious communities have changed their attitudes regarding their waterfronts and now treat them with respect and sacred regard.

As the of a result, what once were backwater harbors for waste and neglect have become highly acclaimed attractions that benefit the surrounding community, region, and visitors from afar.

Pikes place in Seattle used to be rows of unoccupied ramshackle buildings and is now a destination of national acclaim.

Monterey's Cannery row used to be just that. It now features scenic walkways, waterfront dining and an internationally acclaimed aquarium.

Even smaller communities like Boise Idaho have pulled the old tires and rusted cars out of the rivers to reclaim their precious resource.

I will be lending my voice to contribute to a community consciousness that establishes a use case for this property that is respectful of the precious waterfront resource and advances community and public interests consistent with that objective.

Best Regards,

KC and Pamela McDougle
