No New Power Plant

To whom it may concern:

As a Redondo Beach resident, I'm hoping that there not be a new power plant built in my neighborhood. Redondo has become increasingly more densely populated within the twenty years I have lived here. The neighborhood desperately needs open space and parkland. Redondo's parks are few and quite small in comparison to the number of people and cars per square kilometer. Quality of life would improve significantly if the power plant were converted to a natural state, with walks, trees, native coastal plant life and gardens. Another behemoth of steel and concrete would be a travesty to the quaint coastal town that Redondo should be known as.

Please consider the impact on Redondo's residents.

Sincerely,
Louise Quevedo
