Environmental Justice

Has the energy commission ever rejected an application? I think all the talk about considering environmental justice is just talk. If you need to import huge amounts of dirt to raise the project up (hopefully) out of harms way, why would you select a site that would adversely impact minority and low income children, farmworkers and jail inmates? Probably because those are the same people who have very little political clout. They can't hire high priced law firms to beat back such an obsolete lung damaging power plant proposal. If in fact the CEC never turns down proposals this one will be tinkered with , approved and the people will told how lucky they are. Shame on you.
