Building electrification efficiency

As a consumer, grandmother and retired registered nurse, I am concerned about the future health of our community. According to the California Air Resources Board (CARB), the state's lead agency on air quality, the following issues emphasize the need for responsible building codes:

The use of gas appliances has adverse health effects;
Ventilation is necessary but not sufficient to address these impacts; and Building electrification can eliminate these harms.

Government must put in place systems that protect our health. An all electric building code will do just that.
