Get Our Clean Energy Transition Right - Don't Ignore the Local Impacts of Dirty Energy and Discount the Benefits of Clean Energy

Please see the attached petition from 2,188 Center for Biological Diversity supporters urging the California Energy Commission to put people and the planet before polluters in its energy planning.

California Needs Clean Energy Now

March 7, 2024

Dear Chair Hochschild, Vice Chair Gunda and Commissioners McCallister, Monahan and Osuna Gallardo,

We, the undersigned 2,188, urge your commission to grant the Center for Biological Diversity and partners' rulemaking petition, which asks you to consider social costs and non-energy benefits in your clean-energy planning. It's up to you to do the job right and put together a clean energy plan that will protect people, wildlife and the planet from climate chaos.

Last year was the hottest year on record. To save millions of lives, California must abandon fossil fuels and false climate solutions and get a clean, just energy transition in full swing. California law requires 100% clean energy by 2045.

Your commission has ignored the state's air, water and hardest-hit communities for decades in favor of a lopsided, inaccurate and outdated cost-benefit analysis that helps polluters and corporate utilities. By overlooking the local impacts of dirty energy and discounting the myriad of benefits of clean energy, the commission's cost-benefit analysis puts dirty gas above the real, clean energy we need to survive a changing climate.

This myopic approach jeopardizes California's clean energy target and exacerbates the harms and injustices the current, underfunded energy system has on low-income communities of color. For example, in the most recent budget for energy-efficiency programs, "cost-effective" programs received an approved budget of $3 billion. "Cost-ineffective" programs, which serve predominantly communities of color and low-income communities, received $678 million.

The result is staggering and unjust: The outdated cost benefit analysis you rely on gives low-income communities of color only 18% of the clean energy funding wealthier areas get for energy efficiency.

We can't build a clean energy future by relying on outdated, misconstrued data analysis that favors industry and leaves environmental justice communities behind. We urge you to correct past mistakes — not repeat them — by considering the environmental and public health benefits of clean energy in your planning.

And there's no reason why you should discredit these benefits — state law requires it. That's why the Center for Biological Diversity, Central California Asthma Collaborative, California Environmental Justice Alliance, the Asian Pacific Environmental Network and dozens of other groups petitioned your commission to consider improved health and safety, local job creation, reduced water use, improved water quality, and other non-energy benefits in your analysis.

California must get its clean-energy transition right, starting by integrating the environment and public health benefits of clean energy in the planning and investment decision-making process.
