This project endangers our community and goes against the will of the people

Compass energy went around the city of San Juan Capistrano and the wishes of its residents to build a battery storage facility that poses an inherent risk to anyone living in the immediate area. There's been numerous battery fires in recent history that have contaminated air, soil, called for long term evacuations, and who even knows the long-term repercussions and effects of the chemical residents and workers were exposed to during those fires. I urge the California Energy Commission to respect the wishes of the residents and local government of San Juan Capistrano, California and deny compass energies request to store batteries near homes and potentially pollute our air, water and soil.
