

DOCKET

07-BSTD-1

From: glenna morris <rustyntly56@yahoo.com>
To: <cgekas@energy.state.ca.us>
Date: 1/10/2008 8:39 AM
Subject: temperature control

DATE	JAN 10 2008
RECD.	JAN 10 2008

While nowhere in the Bill of Rights is there explicitly a right to set one's own thermostat to whatever temperature one desires (and is able to pay for), the new PCT requirement certainly seems to violate the "a man's home is his castle" common law dictum.

Californians have until January 30th to send their opinions and comments on the pending revisions to Title 24 to the California Energy Commission[1]. Legislators too[2].

Is the government going to tell us when to wipe our asses next?

or how many squares of toilet paper to use? Gezz, That really makes me so mad, I want to cry. I thought in America we have freedom to choice. I vote, as many others vote. and that's my right and priviledge.

After I moved out of me parents, I expect no one telling me what to do or say. And I'm smart enough not to screw up and land behind bars.

I do not want to be controlled by anyone, especially be the government or anyone else controlling what temperature my home is. Makes me want to live in a cave away from the human race.

Glenna Morris

North Highlands, calif