I would like to voice my strong concern over the scope and extent of the proposed 2008 Building Energy Standards. Of course we all understand the importance of energy conservation, and the desire for reduced pollution and a cleaner environment, but this takes regulation to a startling extreme. Specifically the proposal of PCTs. Surely there are more reasonable means available to better control extreme power demands without resorting to such draconian and intrusive methods. I urge the commission to consider and respect the importance of individual rights in the state of California, and how a solution could be reached that accomplish the goals set forth by the utility companies and the commission without having to resort to this level of intrusiveness.

Respectfully,
