Dear Cathy Graber:

I don't see how the Energy Commission can reasonably require any particular type of thermostat in homes, or businesses, especially one that can be controled externally. I think the reasonable limit is of recommendation.

I have a lot of Norwegian blood in me and don't handle heat well. I can't sleep if the room temperature is above 80-82 degrees F. I have had full blown heat exhaustion when I was living in Minnesota and do not wish to go through it again. In Fresno, I have had muscle cramps and wooziness from the heat, even drinking a lot of water. I need a.c. to try to cool off before I become sick. Your proposed fiat seems to put that requirement at risk.

Yours,
John Minich
