SONGS is such a pretty name, but the potential disaster this name conceals for 8.4 million people within a 50 mile radius is no longer worth the risk for the very small amount of energy it produces for California residents. SONGS has served many non-California residents well, but extending it's operation any longer only increases the potential for a unthinkable disaster here in southern California. It's time to sunset this extremely dangerous form of power generation and at the same time, if necessary, move on to one or more of the increasing number of available alternatives.

Thank you,
