Purpose

This meeting will encourage an informal dialogue of natural gas issues among state agencies, utilities, and interested stakeholders. Issues that will be discussed include the February 6, 2014, natural gas price spike; potential implications to California of Mexico's energy reform; affects of adjusted gas nomination schedule; and hydrostatic pipeline testing implications on electric systems and pipeline integrity.

Participants will use the information discussed during the meeting to improve their understanding of California natural gas issues. Participants are encouraged to ask questions, offer recommendations and express their concerns on current natural gas issues. This is an informal dialogue and not considered to be part of other regulatory or policy proceedings.

Background

The California Energy Commission formed the California Natural Gas Stakeholders Working Group during the 2001 energy crisis. Some of the working group participants include: California Air Resources Board; California Public Utilities Commission; Energy Commission; Department of General Services; Division of Oil, Gas and Geothermal

Resources; Sempra Energy; Southern California Edison; Pacific Gas & Electric; Southern California Gas; State Lands Commission; and others. The Energy Commission chairs this group, which is involved in all aspects of natural gas systems in California. The working group participants will provide briefings on a variety of topics currently affecting California. Additionally, the agencies will be interested in gathering information on concerns and suggestions from members of the public.
